PRESENTS THE STAR OF THE MONTH!

Roger Smith

Roger Smith, who only a few years ago was a Navy link trainer instructor in Honolulu, and spent his evenings on liberty singing at private parties, co-stars with Efrem Zimbalist, Jr. (Appearing in Jughead #56. Now on Sale) and Edward Byrnes in ABC-TV's hour-long mystery adventure series "77 Sunset Strip."

That off-duty singing led him directly to Hollywood, although he had started studying acting in Los Angeles at the age of seven.

Roger was born in Southgate, Calif. to Dallas and Leone Smith. At the age of seven he was studying with the Meglin Kiddies, and for several years appeared in plays at the Mayan Theatre, the Wilshire Ebell and other theatre groups in the Los Angeles area.

He gave up acting at the age of 12 when the family moved to Nogales, Ariz., where his father opened and still maintains a company manufacturing Western clothes. Roger attended Nogales High School, where he captained the football team, then went on to the University of Arizona.

Forgetting his childhood acting ambitions, he was preparing to enter his father's business.

However, after playing the lead in a fraternity play, the drama coach persuaded Smith to major in drama.

In addition to acting, he became a fine calypso singer and accompanied himself on the guitar.

With a partner on the bongo drums, Smith won first place on "The Horace Heidt Show" and the "Ted Mack Original Amateur Hour."

At this juncture he was called to active duty with the Navy. One evening James Cagney, then filming on "Mister Roberts" in Honolulu, heard Smith sing at a party. Impressed with the youngster's voice and stage presence, he encouraged Smith to come to Hollywood upon his discharge from the Navy.

As soon as his hitch was over, he headed for the film town. Cagney was out on location, so Smith set out on his own to land a part. He made the rounds of the studios without any success. Broke, he settled for a singing spot at the Cabaret Showcase Theatre where he literally sang for his supper.

A girl he met at the theatre asked Smith to help her with a reading for Columbia Pictures. The girl didn't get the contract—but Smith did.

When Cagney returned to Hollywood, Smith could happily inform his friend and sponsor that he had gotten his initial engagement on his own.

Universal-International borrowed him from Columbia and later signed him to a contract. It was while at Columbia that Smith met Victoria Shaw, Australian beauty then making "The Eddie Duchin Story." They were married on July 28, 1956. They have a daughter, Tracey, born July 3, 1957.

Smith was given a leading role in his first motion picture, "No Time To Be Young." This was followed by "Crash Landing" and "Operation Madball." When Cagney portrayed Lon Chaney in "Man of a Thousand Faces," he suggested that Smith would be good as his son.

Impressive performances by Smith in two Cagney films, "Man of a Thousand Faces" and "Never Steal Anything Small," influenced Warner Bros. in taking over his contract from Universal-International and then immediately assigning him a leading role with Rosalind Russell in "Auntie Mame."

Roger's 175 pounds is mounted on a rugged 6 foot 1 inch frame topped with dark blond hair.
